

2.3. Some mysteries of GMAT, solved

2.3.1 The various “avatars” of “that”

We covered pronouns (Section 2.1.2) and conjunctions (Section 2.1.7) earlier. Figure 14 below encapsulates the various usages of that in English Grammar:

that can be used:

1. As a relative pronoun, “that” relates to another noun preceding it in the sentence. In the sentences in Figure 14 above, that relates to car and matches respectively.
2. As a demonstrative pronoun, “that” stands for a person, place or thing that must be pointed to.
3. As a conjunction, “that” connects two clauses (refer to section 2.2.1 for clauses). In the first sentence in Figure 14 above, that connects two clauses He said and he would work hard. Similarly, in the second sentence in Figure 14 above, that connects two clauses Jack believed and nothing is impossible.

The intent of introducing the various avatars of that is to depict that not all usages of that can be treated in the same manner.

Note #1: When used as a relative pronoun, that can refer to both singular and plural nouns. So, both the following are correct:

The car that is parked in the basement is mine.
– Relative pronoun that refers to singular noun car.

The cars that are parked in the basement are mine.
– Relative pronoun that refers to plural noun cars.

However, when used as a demonstrative pronoun, that can only refer to singular nouns.

So, while the following are correct:

That is the car I like.
That is precisely my point.

Following are not correct:

That are the cars I like.
That are precisely my points.

To fix the above sentences, we need to use these/those:

Those are the cars I like.
These are precisely my points.

Note #2: When used as a demonstrative pronoun, that can refer to both living and non-living things. So, both the following are correct:

Jack's car is better than that of Peter.
– Demonstrative pronoun that refers to non-living noun car.

Michael's wife earns more than that of James.
– Demonstrative pronoun that refers to living noun wife.

However, when used as a relative pronoun, that can only refer to non-living things; that cannot refer to living beings. So, while the following is correct:

Mary sold the car that her father had gifted.
– Relative pronoun that refers to non-living noun car.

Following is not correct:

Peter's friend that met with an accident is recovering in the hospital.
– Relative pronoun that refers to living noun friend, but this is not allowed. Hence, this sentence is incorrect; the relative pronoun who needs to be used.
