

Forms of the verb “to do” can stand for the main verb

Do, does and did are all forms of the verb to do. These forms of to do verbs are very flexible; they can stand for the main verb in the sentence: the main verb can be in any tense, but do/does depict the main verb in simple present tense, while did depicts the main verb in simple past tense.

So, all the following are correct:

Peter’s father never went to school, but Peter does.

- The main verb is in simple past tense (went), but does would stand for the simple present tense of main verb went: goes. So, the sentence reads: Peter’s father never went to school, but Peter goes.

Peter’s father has never gone to Paris, but last year, Peter did.

- The main verb is in present perfect tense (has gone), but did would stand for the simple past tense of main verb has gone: went. So, the sentence reads: Peter’s father has never gone to Paris, but last year, Peter went.

In the article “Launch it like Steve Jobs”, the author asserts that during new product launches, no one has ever captured the imagination of the customers, the way Steve Jobs did.

- The main verb is in present perfect tense (has captured), but did would stand for the simple past tense of main verb has captured: captured. So, the sentence reads: In the article “Launch it like Steve Jobs”, the author asserts that during new product launches, no one has ever captured the imagination of the customers, the way Steve Jobs captured.

In fact, these to do forms of the verb, in a strict sense, don’t actually represent ellipsis, because these forms of the verb don’t actually assume/leave out any words (the way ellipsis does), but just stand for the main verb in the sentence.

Note: To do forms of the verb can stand for the main verb of the sentence only if the main verb of the sentence is an action verb (refer to section 2.1.3 for Verbs). On the other hand, if the main verb of the sentence is a linking verb, the to do forms of the verb cannot stand for the main verb.

For example, following sentence is incorrect:

Peter is more hard-working than his grandfather did.

The main verb of this sentence is a linking verb (is) and hence, we cannot use did.

We fix this sentence as:

Peter is more hard-working than his grandfather was.

On the other hand, following sentence is correct:

Peter works harder than his grandfather did.

The main verb of this sentence is an action verb (works) and hence, we can use did to stand for the simple past tense verb worked.

Test takers should also note that perfect continuous tenses (such as present perfect continuous and past perfect continuous) are not tested on GMAT and hence, we will not discuss these in this chapter.
