

10. When the subject is a noun clause, the subject is always considered singular:

What one learns from mistakes (is/are) resilience, will power and courage.

What is very clear from recent debacle of the party in the elections (is/are) lack of leadership, absence of political vision, and discontent among voters.

What statements politicians give (is/are) important.

How many superstitions there are (don't/doesn't) matter.

That a causal relationship exists between health and labor productivity (has been/have been) concluded by several empirical studies.